

Chapter 10. Copyright and Permission to Publish

To comply with the provisions of the US Copyright Act of 1976 (P.L. 94-553), ASA, CSSA, and SSSA handle copyright and permissions in the following ways.

1. A Permission to Publish and Republish statement is used when the Societies do not intend to copyright an individual article in a publication.
2. A Transfer of Copyright form is used for publications where the individual articles are copyrighted by ASA, CSSA, and/or SSSA. Details of the transfer agreement are given on the form.

For journal articles, copyright is addressed at the time of acceptance via a license agreement form. The permission to publish and republish statement is part of the online submissions process. The specific license may depend on whether the author(s) are a US government employee, an employee of certain non-US governments, or a nongovernment author. Generally, work done by government employees on government time is in the public domain and cannot be copyrighted; the form certifies how the work was done. All authors of an article must be US government employees at the time the work was done for the article to be in the public domain in the United States. Authors of accepted works receive instructions for signing their article license, which includes a section on copyright ownership. For more information on understanding copyright and licensing, see <https://authorservices.wiley.com/author-resources/Journal-Authors/licensing/index.html>.

The copyright law also requires that permission be obtained to use copyrighted material that was published elsewhere. It is the author's responsibility to obtain permission from the owner of material not in the public domain. Correspondence should be sent to the appropriate copyright holder requesting permission. The permission statement(s) should be sent to headquarters to become part of the manuscript documentation.

Many of our journals are open access. For our non-open access (hybrid) journals, authors may make their articles open access for an additional charge, as noted in the journal's online instructions to authors.
